2015 ADVANCE Interdisciplinary and Engaged Research Seed Grants, University of Maryland ($20,000)
Role: Principal Investigator

Maternal intimate partner violence victimization and immune activation in women and children in Tanzania

Intimate partner violence (IPV) is a critical public health issue that impacts families worldwide. Research has linked IPV with multiple diseases and with a variety of adverse psychological and physical health consequences in children. Although there is a substantial body of literature on the economic and health impacts of IPV, the physiological pathways underlying the association between IPV and elevated chronic disease risk among women and children are still unclear. IPV has been associated with elevated inflammation in women and children, and inflammation is an established risk marker for a number of chronic diseases, including cardiovascular disease, cancers, diabetes, and depression. It is plausible that immune markers might serve as a shared mechanism between IPV and poor health outcomes among abused women and their children. This study examines the relationship between IPV and exposure to inter-parental violence and C-reactive protein (CRP) levels, a marker of systemic inflammation, for women and children respectively.

2009-2014 National Institute of Mental Health ($699,656)
Role: Principal Investigator

HIV Risk Reduction for Women Reporting Intimate Partner Violence

The two foremost health problems impacting young adult women are HIV infection and intimate partner violence (IPV). Currently, there are very few empirically tested interventions that simultaneously address women's risk for HIV and their experiences of IPV. The purpose of this research is to develop and test the feasibility and efficacy of an integrated HIV-IPV prevention intervention for community-based abused women. A randomized clinical trial comparing 30 participants receiving the IMB-TGP intervention to 30 participants receiving group counseling at a domestic violence agency will be conducted. This research could have a significant public health impact by improving health outcomes for women who experience IPV.

2005 Syracuse University Vision Fund ($5,000)
Role: Co-Investigator

Interdisciplinary and Community Partnership: Developing, Supporting, and Sustaining University and Community Agency Collaborations

The purpose of this project is to build collaboration with Syracuse Community Health Center (SCHC) to foster involvement in student learning experiences, enhance faculty relationships with SCHC, and build formal and informal bridges, links, and connections to address the problems of the urban Syracuse community. This partnership is a powerful strategy for improving teaching and learning, civic responsibility, and the overall health of the Syracuse community. A major goal is to develop a course elective, to be housed in Human Services and Health Professions, which will focus on issues of concern to the Syracuse community that can be addressed from an inter-professional perspective.

2004-2009 U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Administration of Children and Families ($425,000). Grant cut short due to pull out by National Council for Family Relations (funded agency) in 2006.
Role: Co-Investigator

Healthy Marriage Resource Center

This grant was aimed at developing a comprehensive clearinghouse to provide information on healthy marriage-related topics for professional working with couples and marital issues. Syracuse University was one of five funded sites and was specifically charged to evaluate and summarize healthy marriage programs in the country.

2004 College of Human Services and Health Professions, Syracuse University ($5,000)
Role: Principal Investigator

Experiences of Women in Doctoral Marriage and Family Therapy Training Programs

Even though in the last 30 years the field of marriage and family therapy has paid greater attention to gender as a variable impacting therapeutic practice, feminist critique of family therapy, development of feminist therapist identity, and feminist supervision there is lack of empirical research on the experiences of women in MFT training. The purpose of this research is to better understand women doctoral students' experiences in training and how they take decisions that affect their training program, future career, and personal life.

2003-2008 U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Administration of Children and Families ($852,000)
Role: Co-Investigator

Promoting Child Welfare: Training Professionals to Support for Healthy Marriages, Relationships, and Families

The purpose of this grant is to provide training to persons who work in child welfare public and non-profit agencies to enable them to facilitate healthy marriage and family formation. These agencies are charged with protecting children from child abuse and neglect. Until now, in their work with parents, child welfare workers have focused on parenting skills, but not on the marital relationship of the parents. There is research support for the perspective that children are at a reduced risk of child abuse and neglect if the parents with whom they reside are in a marriage that is healthy. Thus, the healthy marriage and family formation grants aim to increase the welfare of children. This project involves both curriculum development and training.
